Course Description and Who Should Attend

Pharmaceutical packaging operations are key to: protecting the product from the environment during storage and transportation; ensure the product is correctly identified; ensuring the correct supporting information (leaflet); ensuring the product is genuine; protecting the patients; and projecting the manufacturing company's image (artwork and free from cosmetic damage).

This course covers: the importance of getting it right, control of packaging materials; the importance of good line layout/design; pack attributes and controlling parameters/devices; understanding the risks and risk assessments, factory acceptance testing, equipment qualification (installation and operational qualification); packing process performance qualification, challenges relating to serialization and sampling (qualification and routine).

The course is aimed at individuals involved directly or indirectly in qualifying packaging systems/process. Target disciplines include validation, quality assurance, technical support, production (supervisors and management), and engineering.

Course Presenter
